

18th Annual Convention

Izaak Walton League
of America

Oregon State Council

Tillamook, Oregon

July 26 - 27 - 28, 1940

Waltonians
Talk River
Pollution

*July 27, 1940
Journal*
TILLAMOOK, July 27.—Stream pollution was stressed in opening day addresses of the 18th annual convention of the Oregon state council, Izaak Walton league, here Friday.

Ed. F. Averill, Portland wild life authority, was chairman of the opening session. Mayor D. E. Steinbach and R. H. Gardner, president of the Tillamook chapter, delivered the addresses of welcome.

J. Stanley Emery of Marshfield, president of the Oregon state council, in opening the convention, stressed the attention being paid to stream pollution in Oregon, especially in the Rogue river, for which a resolution is coming before the convention. Carl E. Green of Portland, secretary of the state sanitary authority, pointed out that in recent years, with federal aid largely responsible, sewage systems with treatment has seen an increase, with 44 per cent. of Oregon cities now having sewage treatment systems. He stressed a need for stream studies and told of such work now being done in the Sauvies island section of the Columbia river and on Willamette slough.

Arthur I. Moulton of Portland, speaking on anti-pollution legislation in Oregon, congratulated the Oregon sanitary authority on its remarkable work in its two and a half years of administration, although limited in funds. He said the tax on disposal of mill waste should be borne by the owners rather than the public at large, declaring that funds for this purpose should not be taken from the game appropriation.

William L. Finley of Portland, vice president of the Izaak Walton League of America and vice president of the Oregon Wildlife federation, speaking on the status of national legislation on stream pollution, said the federal government is assuming too much that belongs to the states. While we must guard states' rights, he said, stream pollution affecting rivers flowing through two or more states is a national problem which must have state co-operation.

H. Abbott Lawrence of Portland spoke on Portland's sewage disposal problem, pointing out that steps to relieve the rivers, pollution are vitally needed and criticizing the city administration for its negligence. A forum of league members and a women's card party in the Tillamook hotel featured Friday night's program.

Pollution
Meet Topic

Oregonian

Walton Leaguers

Open Session

July 27, 1940

TILLAMOOK, July 26 (Special)—Stream pollution was stressed during the opening-day address of the 18th annual convention of the Oregon State Council, Izaak Walton league, here Friday.

Ed F. Averill, Portland wild life authority, was chairman of the opening session. Mayor D. E. Steinbach and R. H. Gardner, president of the Tillamook chapter, delivered the addresses of welcome.

J. Stanley Emery of Marshfield, president of the Oregon state council, in opening the convention, stressed the attention being paid to stream pollution in Oregon, especially in the Rogue river, for which a resolution is coming before the convention.

Carl E. Green of Portland, secretary of the state sanitary authority, pointed to the increase in sewage systems. Forty-four per cent of Oregon cities now have sewage treatment systems, he said. He stressed a need for stream studies and told of such work now being done in the Sauvies island section of the Columbia river and on the Willamette slough.

Oregon Board Lauded

Arthur J. Moulton of Portland, speaking on anti-pollution legislation in Oregon, congratulated the Oregon sanitary authority and its remarkable work in its 2½ years of administration, although limited in funds. He said the tax on disposal of mill wastes should be borne by the owners rather than the public at large, declaring that funds for this purpose should not be taken from the game appropriation.

Dr. William L. Finley of Portland, vice-president of the Izaak Walton League of America and vice-president of the Oregon Wild Life federation, speaking on the status of national legislation on stream pollution, said the federal government is assuming too much that belongs to the states. "While we must guard states' rights," he said, "stream pollution affecting rivers flowing through two or more states is a national problem, but must have state co-operation."

H. Abbott Lawrence of Portland spoke on Portland's sewage disposal problem, pointing out that steps to eliminate river filth are vitally needed and criticizing the city administration for its negligence in this matter.

A forum of league members and a ladies' card party in the Tillamook hotel featured Friday night's program.

Friday— A. M.

Registration, Tillamook Hotel

Friday— 1:15 P. M.

ED. F. AVERILL, Chairman

Welcoming Addresses

Honorable D. E. Steinbach, Mayor of Tillamook

R. H. Gardner, President, Tillamook Chapter

Opening of Convention

J. Stanley Emery, Pres. Oregon St. Council

1:30 - Work of the State Sanitary Authority
Carl Green, State Sanitary Engineer

2:00 - Anti-Pollution Legislation in Oregon
Arthur J. Moulton

2:30 - National Anti-Pollution Legislation
Wm. L. Finley, Vice-Pres. I.W.L.A.

3:00 - Portland's Sewage Disposal Problem
H. Abbott Lawrence

Friday Evening—

8 P. M. - Forum of League Members
Room 239, Tillamook Hotel

8 P. M. - Ladies Dessert Bridge
Banquet Room Tillamook Hotel

Saturday— A. M.

W. J. SMITH, Chairman

9:15 A. M. - League Objectives

10:00 - Closing of Coastal Streams

11:00 - Wildlife Legislation

Saturday— P. M.

CHESTER McCARTY, Chairman

Presidents Report

Report of Treasurer

Resolutions

Election of Officers

Adjournment

Pollution Meet Topic Oregonian Walton Leaguers Open Session

July 27, 1940
TILLAMOOK, July 26 (Special)—Stream pollution was stressed during the opening-day address of the 18th annual convention of the Oregon State Council, Izaak Walton league, here Friday.

Ed F. Averill, Portland wild life authority, was chairman of the opening session. Mayor D. E. Steinbach and R. H. Gardner, president of the Tillamook chapter, delivered the addresses of welcome.

J. Stanley Emery of Marshfield, president of the Oregon state council, in opening the convention, stressed the attention being paid to stream pollution in Oregon, especially in the Rogue river, for which a resolution is coming before the convention.

Carl E. Green of Portland, secretary of the state sanitary authority, pointed to the increase in sewage systems. Forty-four per cent of Oregon cities now have sewage treatment systems, he said. He stressed a need for stream studies and told of such work now being done in the Sauvies island section of the Columbia river and on the Willamette slough.

Oregon Board Lauded

Arthur J. Moulton of Portland, speaking on anti-pollution legislation in Oregon, congratulated the Oregon sanitary authority and its remarkable work in its 2½ years of administration, although limited in funds. He said the tax on disposal of mill wastes should be borne by the owners rather than the public at large, declaring that funds for this purpose should not be taken from the game appropriation.

Dr. William L. Finley of Portland, vice-president of the Izaak Walton League of America and vice-president of the Oregon Wild Life federation, speaking on the status of national legislation on stream pollution, said the federal government is assuming too much that belongs to the states. "While we must guard states' rights," he said, "stream pollution affecting rivers flowing through two or more states is a national problem, but must have state co-operation."

H. Abbott Lawrence of Portland spoke on Portland's sewage disposal problem, pointing out that steps to eliminate river filth are vitally needed and criticizing the city administration for its negligence in this matter.

A forum of league members and a ladies' card party in the Tillamook hotel featured Friday night's program.

Waltonians Talk River Pollution

*July 27, 1940
Journal*
TILLAMOOK, July 27.—Stream pollution was stressed in opening day addresses of the 18th annual convention of the Oregon state council, Izaak Walton league, here Friday.

Ed. F. Averill, Portland wild life authority, was chairman of the opening session. Mayor D. E. Steinbach and R. H. Gardner, president of the Tillamook chapter, delivered the addresses of welcome.

J. Stanley Emery of Marshfield, president of the Oregon state council, in opening the convention, stressed the attention being paid to stream pollution in Oregon, especially in the Rogue river, for which a resolution is coming before the convention. Carl E. Green of Portland, secretary of the state sanitary authority, pointed out that in recent years, with federal aid largely responsible, sewage systems with treatment has seen an increase, with 44 per cent. of Oregon cities now having sewage treatment systems. He stressed a need for stream studies and told of such work now being done in the Sauvies island section of the Columbia river and on Willamette slough.

Arthur J. Moulton of Portland, speaking on anti-pollution legislation in Oregon, congratulated the Oregon sanitary authority on its remarkable work in its two and a half years of administration, although limited in funds. He said the tax on disposal of mill waste should be borne by the owners rather than the public at large, declaring that funds for this purpose should not be taken from the game appropriation.

William L. Finley of Portland, vice president of the Izaak Walton League of America and vice president of the Oregon Wildlife federation, speaking on the status of national legislation on stream pollution, said the federal government is assuming too much that belongs to the states. While we must guard states' rights, he said, stream pollution affecting rivers flowing through two or more states is a national problem which must have state co-operation.

H. Abbott Lawrence of Portland spoke on Portland's sewage disposal problem, pointing out that steps to relieve the rivers, pollution are vitally needed and criticizing the city administration for its negligence. A forum of league members and a women's card party in the Tillamook hotel featured Friday night's program.

Friday— A. M.

Registr

Friday— 1:15 P.

ED. J

Welcoming

Honorable I

R. H. Garc

Openin

J. Stan

1:30 - Wor

Carl

2:00 - Anti

2:30 - Nat

3:00 - Por

Saturday Evening—

Banquet, Tillamook Hotel

W. J. Smith, Toastmaster

Address, Wm. L. Finley ✓

Moving Pictures

W. J. Smith

SUNDAY PICNIC — KILCHIS RIVER

Chicken Dinner - Horse Shoes - Races - Shooti

Prizes for All Events

Be Out There at 10 o'clock!

Pollution Meet Topic

Oregonian

Walton Leaguers

Open Session

July 27, 1940

TILLAMOOK, July 26 (Special)—Stream pollution was stressed during the opening-day address of the 18th annual convention of the Oregon State Council, Izaak Walton league, here Friday.

Ed F. Averill, Portland wild life authority, was chairman of the opening session. Mayor D. E. Steinbach and R. H. Gardner, president of the Tillamook chapter, delivered the addresses of welcome.

J. Stanley Emery of Marshfield, president of the Oregon state council, in opening the convention, stressed the attention being paid to stream pollution in Oregon, especially in the Rogue river, for which a resolution is coming before the convention.

Carl E. Green of Portland, secretary of the state sanitary authority, pointed to the increase in sewage systems. Forty-four per cent of Oregon cities now have sewage treatment systems, he said. He stressed a need for stream studies and told of such work now being done in the Sauvies island section of the Columbia river and on the Willamette slough.

Oregon Board Lauded

Arthur J. Moulton of Portland, speaking on anti-pollution legislation in Oregon, congratulated the Oregon sanitary authority and its remarkable work in its 2½ years of administration, although limited in funds. He said the tax on disposal of mill wastes should be borne by the owners rather than the public at large, declaring that funds for this purpose should not be taken from the game appropriation.

Dr. William L. Finley of Portland, vice-president of the Izaak Walton League of America and vice-president of the Oregon Wild Life federation, speaking on the status of national legislation on stream pollution, said the federal government is assuming too much that belongs to the states. "While we must guard states' rights," he said, "stream pollution affecting rivers flowing through two or more states is a national problem, but must have state co-operation."

H. Abbott Lawrence of Portland spoke on Portland's sewage disposal problem, pointing out that steps to eliminate river filth are vitally needed and criticizing the city administration for its negligence in this matter.

A forum of league members and a ladies' card party in the Tillamook hotel featured Friday night's program.

Waltonians Talk River Pollution

*July 27, 1940
Journal*

TILLAMOOK, July 27.—Stream pollution was stressed in opening day addresses of the 18th annual convention of the Oregon state council, Izaak Walton league, here Friday.

Ed. F. Averill, Portland wild life authority, was chairman of the opening session. Mayor D. E. Steinbach and R. H. Gardner, president of the Tillamook chapter, delivered the addresses of welcome.

J. Stanley Emery of Marshfield, president of the Oregon state council, in opening the convention, stressed the attention being paid to stream pollution in Oregon, especially in the Rogue river, for which a resolution is coming before the convention. Carl E. Green of Portland, secretary of the state sanitary authority, pointed out that in recent years, with federal aid largely responsible, sewage systems with treatment has seen an increase, with 44 per cent. of Oregon cities now having sewage treatment systems. He stressed a need for stream studies and told of such work now being done in the Sauvies island section of the Columbia river and on Willamette slough.

Arthur I. Moulton of Portland, speaking on anti-pollution legislation in Oregon, congratulated the Oregon sanitary authority on its remarkable work in its two and a half years of administration, although limited in funds. He said the tax on disposal of mill waste should be borne by the owners rather than the public at large, declaring that funds for this purpose should not be taken from the game appropriation.

William L. Finley of Portland, vice president of the Izaak Walton League of America and vice president of the Oregon Wildlife federation, speaking on the status of national legislation on stream pollution, said the federal government is assuming too much that belongs to the states. While we must guard states' rights, he said, stream pollution affecting rivers flowing through two or more states is a national problem which must have state co-operation.

H. Abbott Lawrence of Portland spoke on Portland's sewage disposal problem, pointing out that steps to relieve the rivers, pollution are vitally needed and criticizing the city administration for its negligence. A forum of league members and a women's card party in the Tillamook hotel featured Friday night's program.