

Oregonian July 23, 1933

Animals Band Together to Protect Young

Remarkable Co-Operation Among Herds of Caribou Noted in Alaska During Ice Break-Up on Yukon in Spring

HERE'S THE BATTLE FOR THE LIGHTWEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP OF KLAMATH LAKE

People of Klamath county, Oregon, get rather accustomed to the public settlement of family differences such as is shown above, but few of them have opportunity to take such complete story-telling photographs as this taken by William L. Finley, Oregon naturalist, and H. T. Bohlman. These are Caspian terns with feathers ruffled, bills together, fighting to a finish. Standing about, apparently adding voice to the general babble of on-lookers, are two other birds, possibly seconds to the fighters.

In the same picture are several young birds wondering what it is all about. These terns are prominent residents of the Klamath lake district and frequent the streets of Klamath Falls. They are about the size of the ordinary dove, are black and white in color, have swallow tails and are graceful in flight. One of their more interesting traits is their habit of swooping to the surface of the water to pick up floating insects without hardly touching the water.

Medford Greets Chamber Group; Carson Speaks

Medford, July 27.—Seventeen Portland business men, on a goodwill tour to the Rogue River valley, arrived here late Wednesday in a special caravan, having been delayed in their schedule by the Grants Pass Cavemen. E. N. Weinbaum, manager of the Portland chamber, headed the delegation.

Mayor Carson of Portland was met at Wolf Creek by state police to insure his appearance at Medford in time to make a radio speech at 6:30 p. m.

William L. Finley, naturalist, also of Portland, is a member of the group which was honored at a banquet here Wednesday night by the local chamber of commerce following a tour throughout the valley.

Grants Pass, July 27.—(AP)—Fifteen Portland business leaders ate the flesh of the sabre-tooth tiger and drank the blood of the sacred dinosaur here Wednesday morning under the urge of clubs wielded by skin-clad Oregon Cavemen.

Held up on the Pacific Highway north of the city by the band of dawn-men, the members of the Portland Chamber of Commerce were transported under guard into the city and initiated into the Caveman order before they were permitted to enjoy the luncheon served them by Grants Pass Rotary and the chamber of commerce.

The good-will party is to be joined here by Mayor Carson of Portland, who arrived at Medford Wednesday to accompany them on the remainder of their Oregon tour.

WALTON LEAGUE TO MEET

Oregonian State Convention of Oregon Chapters to Start Friday.

The second annual convention for Oregon and western Washington of the Izaak Walton League of America and 100 other local sportsmen's organizations will open Friday at the Benson hotel and last for three days. Between 400 and 500 delegates are expected.

Highlights of the sessions, to be devoted largely to sportsmen's problems and discussions of natural resources of the western region, will be several well-known speakers addressing the delegates. They are Frank Branch Riley, B. F. Mulkey, Ira N. Gabrielson, Chester A. Leichardt, George Alexander, Arthur I. Moulton, Governor Meier, Mayor Carson, William A. Davidson and William L. Finley, who will give an illustrated lecture. George M. Rauch also will speak at 1:15 P. M. Saturday of destruction of the Willowa valley.

Delegates will attend the Multnomah Kennel club's races Friday night and present a trophy to the winning dog in a special Izaak Walton league event. Saturday golf and a theater party will be entertainment features, and Saturday night a stag banquet will be held, with Arthur Moulton as toastmaster.

Sunday a golf tournament will be held at Peninsula links and a picnic at Jantzen Beach park.

The executive committee for the sessions is William A. Davidson, chairman; M. Arch Milligan, president of Portland chapter, Izaak Walton league; William A. Barker, Stan Stenger and J. E. Christofferson.